Spinning top of the lid re-welded and one skate consolidated.

Two examples are reproduced in: "Sächsisches Zinn des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts" by Günter Reinheckel, pages 143 and 192. This tmug comes from a mold from the end of the 16th or the beginning of the 17th century, it is identical in all respects to one of the models cited above.

The absence of a master founder's mark does not allow us to consider it with certainty as dating from the 1600s;

These objects with relief decoration called "Edelzinn" were not chiseled as we often hear but came "raw from the foundry" which supposed having a mold of high quality of definition and a great mastery of the casting technique.

The definition of the relief decoration of the mug presented here is of equal quality to that of its period ancestors.
