Description

This oil on canvas, made in 1847 by the artist Philippe Ronde, depicts a military scene in front of a barracks. It shows a group of soldiers in uniform standing in line in front of classical-style buildings, probably military installations. The landscape in the background is enlivened by a few trees and buildings in neutral tones, evoking a sober but solemn setting. The work is characterized by meticulous realism, with particular attention paid to the details of the uniforms and the architecture.

The composition offers a balanced perspective, depicting both the rigid organization of the soldiers and the calm of the surroundings.

Signature lower right and dated 1847. The frame is made of gilded wood, richly decorated with floral motifs.
