Mecklenburg Jaeger Battalion No. 14

After his active time he studied at the Academy in Munich. In Berlin, where he later moved, he was appreciated both as a portraitist and as a painter of animals, able to observe them with the eye of the artist and depicted them with the fidelity characteristic of his painting.

With the outbreak of the First World War, Stenglin entered the field as a captain of the Landwehr in the reserve Jaeger battalion No. 15 in Potsdam and was killed in an assault near Dixmuide.
