Description

Charming individual earthenware cooler, early 18th century with blue decoration of ironwork and mascarons. Imagine the refinement of a Provençal table, which offered each guest the possibility of cooling their glass as they wished. If the period of this object is unambiguous, the attribution to a production center remains more delicate. The facility would have it for Moustier but for my part the paleness of the blue and a certain rusticity, questions me. The object, delicate document of the art of living under the regency in the south, is in the state, with a few (photos) and small lacks of enamel. a discreet restoration will restore its perfection.
