trees, forest atmospheres, places full of history, captivating valleys, or even a landscape in its simplest form that he would know how to enhance with a vital contrast.

Our canvas, not precisely located, is to be replaced in the surroundings of Bordeaux, a vast area where Cabié set up his easel episodically for several decades, escaping from the city where he had one of his studios. Pessac, the banks of the Garonne near Portets, Parentis en Born, etc. It is difficult to locate this large oak for the moment without finding another work on which the painter would have left a mention.
