Édouard Rosset-Granger, born in Vincennes and died in Paris, was a portrait painter, landscape artist, pastellist, genre painter and illustrator. The natural son of Édouard Dubufe, Paul Édouard Rosset-Granger studied with Alexandre Cabanel, Édouard Dubufe and Alexis-Joseph Mazerolle at the École nationale supérieure des Beaux-arts de Paris. From 1878, he exhibited mythological subjects and genre paintings at the Salon des artistes français, then at the Salon de la Société nationale des Beaux-Arts and the Société des amis des arts de Bordeaux. He won several awards at trade fairs. He was awarded the gold medal in the Decorative Arts section of the 1900 Universal Exhibition in Paris. Rosset-Granger was named Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur in 1898. From 1906 to 1909, he participated in the decoration of the Saint-Mandé town hall with Guillaume Dubufe, his half-brother, who had been his fellow student at the Beaux-Arts in Paris. In 1900, he took part in the decoration of the golden room of the Le Train bleu restaurant at the Gare de Lyon in Paris, with a decorative panel depicting Lac du Bourget. At the end of the 19th century, Rosset-Granger worked in the Ternes district, in a workshop at 5, rue Émile-Allez. In April 1902, he moved to his new studio in the Plaine de Monceaux at 45, avenue de Villiers, which he still occupied in 1906. His immediate neighbor was Guillaume Dubufe, whose townhouse was located at no. 43 avenue Villiers.
