Description

Titled 'Anchored in the Ground' by the artist, this exceptional piece depicts a wooded area, in the foreground of which the winding roots of a large tree can be seen exposed in the ground. These sprawling roots and the bare branches of winter are beautifully captured in sepia tones by Morphew, who evokes a sense of memory and nostalgia in this work. On the reverse, the artist describes his colour scheme and the specific shades of paint used to create this piece.

Reginald Morphew was an architect and painter born in Wandsworth, London in 1874, known for his highly accomplished watercolour landscapes.
