Description

Neapolitan chairs from the end of the 18th century in walnut. Originally, they were part of a set which certainly included a sofa and armchairs.

That these are living room chairs is deduced from the fact that these chairs are slightly lower than the dining table chairs.

The joinery is in good condition, but polishing and consolidation is suggested for some chairs deemed to be slightly loose; the seat is also solid and covered in white leather which will however need to be replaced with a suitable fabric.
