

Kangxi Imari Large Porcelain Mug 'tankard', 1700s

500 EUR

Period : 18th century

Condition : Parfait état

Material : Porcelain

Description

This rare and valuable Chinese mug is an exquisite work of art created by master craftsmen during the Kangxi period (1662-1722) of the Qing Dynasty. Made in the "Imari" style, this mug is a striking example of Chinese porcelain specifically produced for the European export market.

The vibrant Imari palette, featuring rich shades of blue, red, and gold, beautifully highlights the uniqueness and artistic value of the piece. The decorative elements include Eastern landscapes with traditional architectural and natural motifs, which were highly sought after by European collectors of the time. The large and convenient form of the mug also aligns with Western preferences and differs from traditional Chinese shapes, emphasizing its orientation towards the

Dealer

Gillers Antiques

Specialists in 19th-century European silverware, porcelain and décor

Mobile : +44 7738009924

Buntingford SG9 0PY

export market.

On the bottom of the mug is the inscription "???", which translates to "Elegant Collection of Treasures" or "Precious Collectible Object." This mark not only signifies quality but also confirms that the mug was intended as a collectible luxury item.

The mug is in excellent antique condition, having retained the brightness of its colors and the integrity of its glaze, making it an even more valuable example of Chinese porcelain from the Kangxi period.

Dimensions : Height 14,8 cm, width 18 cm, diameter 12 cm. Weight 900 grams.

Please examine the attached photos carefully as they form an integral part of this description. The item will be shipped with full tracking and insurance. Please note that shipping costs include labour, packaging, and postage.