(late 17th century). Materials: Marquetry wood and brass inlays. Function: Master piece made to demonstrate the technical and artistic talent of a cabinetmaker. Condition: Good general condition with a beautiful original patina. Note a few small flaws (brass rods), discreet and in no way altering the aesthetics and integrity of the piece. A Unique and Historic Object This type of chest of drawers, reserved for cabinetmakers who had perfectly mastered their art, was designed to present all the complexity and richness of a life-size piece of furniture in a reduced format. A true witness to the elegance and refinement of the Regency period, this piece is ideal for collectors of antique furniture and lovers of exceptional craftsmanship. Master or Miniature Chest of Drawers? It is important to distinguish a master chest of drawers from a simple miniature chest of drawers. Master chests of drawers, like this one, were made by apprentice cabinetmakers to demonstrate their know-how during their examination. They reproduce, down to the smallest details, the manufacturing techniques and quality of a life-size piece of furniture. On the other hand, miniature chests of drawers, often used as decorative objects or toys, are generally less elaborate and do not have the same degree of precision. A Decorative Jewel Whether to enrich a collection or bring a touch of prestige to your interior, this master chest of drawers is a piece of history in its own right. Its compact size also makes it a versatile decorative object, perfect for enhancing a desk, a console or a display case. Don't miss this rare opportunity to acquire a unique piece, combining elegance, refinement and craftsmanship from the end of the 17th century.
