finally the SFIO. He then became a Trotskyist. Opposed to the Munich Agreements and Nazism, the artist became a member of the Resistance at the beginning of the Occupation. After the war, he briefly joined the Internationalist Communist Party, from September 1946 to the end of 1947. He then gradually withdrew from militant action to devote himself to painting, on the border between surrealism and symbolism. In 1948, he retired to Èze-Village and two years later, he created a local history museum there. In 2009, a retrospective exhibition of his pictorial work was presented at the ENSAM Teaching and Research Center in Chalons en Champagne. Artist highly rated on ArtPrice.
