Description

The 1970s were a period of great innovation in furniture design, and Mart Stam's (1899-1966) S33 armchairs for Fasem are a perfect example. These armchairs, with their cantilevered tubular metal frames, embody the essence of modernism and the technical ingenuity of the time. The S33 armchairs are distinguished by their chromed tubular metal frames, which create a floating effect without traditional rear legs. This cantilevered design, pioneered at the time, offers a unique combination of style and comfort. The white cowhide leather used for the seat and back adds a touch of luxury and sophistication, while ensuring durability and comfort. Mart Stam, an influential designer of the modernist movement, revolutionized furniture design with his designs. The S33 armchairs are emblematic of his innovative approach, using industrial materials to create pieces that are both functional and aesthetic. This series of armchairs also reflects the interest of the time in new industrial techniques and materials. These armchairs are not only design objects, but also witnesses to the evolution of furniture in the 20th century. They capture the spirit of the 1970s, a period marked by a bold exploration of forms and materials.

Today, Mart Stam's S33 armchairs are considered iconic pieces, sought after by collectors and design enthusiasts. In short, the armchairs created for the Italian company Fasem are a celebration of innovation and modernist design, combining elegance, comfort and technical ingenuity.
