place at the Galerie Druet from December 1 to 13, 1913, paintings by Flandrin were also present at the group exhibition, which took place in the same gallery, from February 9 to 21, 1914, alongside works by Marquet, Rouault, Dufresnoy, Marval and Guerin. Jules Léon Flandrin is a French painter (1871-1947) born in Corenc, not far from Grenoble. Student of Gustave Moreau at the Ecole Nationale des Beaux-Arts in Paris, in the "Fauves" class, alongside Marquet and Matisse. He exhibited from 1897 at the Salon du Champs de Mars, then participated in numerous international exhibitions in England, Germany and Switzerland. He became, at a very young age, a member of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts, then a member of the Salon d'Automne, he was also at the beginning of his career the companion of the artist Jacqueline Marval. He was awarded the Legion of Honor, his works appear in the collections of several French museums, notably in Grenoble, Beauvais, Le Havre, Chambéry and Gray but also abroad in Japan and the United States.
