Description

Oil on canvas. Signed 'Max. PF.' on the upper frame of the capital.

The still life consists of grapes, pomegranate and peaches placed on a capital, there is also a silver tray in the composition; in the background is a landscape with trees and ruins, on the left is a glimpse of a cerulean sky, barely veiled by clouds.

Maximilian Pfeiler made a name for himself with his still lifes in which he placed an architectural fragment in the background of the flowers and fruit, already introducing the taste for ancient ruins that was to become fully established in the 18th century.

The painting has been retouched and restored (minor repainting).

It is presented in a frame.
