Description

Friso Kramer for De Cirkel publisher, Reform table. It uses the same design principles as the Revolt chair. Compared to other tables of the time, the proportions of the Reform table are striking, the combination of its thin top and its base offer a contrasting appearance that asserts its airy lines. Its robust construction in curved profiles is adapted to its function, with in particular two steel reinforcement tubes that support the top. This is covered with anthracite/black linoleum curved with an anodized aluminum edge, the feet end with an integrated plastic cap to avoid marks on more sensitive floors. The gray color is original, it had been adopted in order to bring an atmosphere of tranquility but also to be able to more easily incorporate this type of furniture into various
