Description

Rare and exceptional framed graphite drawing by Julien-éopold Boilly executed end 1871 on strong fine-grained paper depicting an outdoor scene in a square with a kiosk of busy people sitting or not on straw chairs, attentive to reading the "Gazette"; a remarkable scene of incredible finesse that only graphite in the hands of a great recognized artist can render in details of incredible finesse and expression. The well-detailed and very well-typed faces of a troubled era where information was becoming one of the elements of the life of society, subject to debate As is the case in this beautiful work of the fils of "Grand Master" julien Léopold Boilly who signed this well-preserved and properly framed drawing at the bottom right (he was born Son père on July 5, 1761 in La Bassée
