Technique: Hand-carved, with characteristic details such as drapery suggesting clothing or accessories.

Posture and details:

The figure holds an object (perhaps symbolic) in his right hand.

Elements around the neck resemble ornaments or necklaces, suggesting a special status or religious/cultural significance.

The style, marked by a certain naivety in the execution, could be associated with sculptures of popular or religious tradition.

Some features, such as the shape of the ornaments and the proportions, could suggest a link with a non-Western culture, possibly African or South American.

16th century Tribal work.

Of tribal origin, it could represent an ancestor, a divinity or a mythological character used in ritual ceremonies
