German born in 1927, Franz Priking studied at the Bauhaus in 1948, then at the Berlin Academy of Arts where he was a student of Max Pechstein, whose expressionism better suited his temperament. In 1950 he left Germany for Paris, where he stayed for a short time before settling in Provence. During his first French Exhibition in 1952 at the Musée Réattu in Arles, he met Picasso with whom he worked for a few months. After a cubist temptation, Franz Priking found his writing in an expressionist realism characterized by large black circles.

He had a short abstract period at the end of the
