Description

Important chapel chandelier called sanctuary lamp from the Charles X period with an architectural structure in the Neo-Gothic style entirely in finely chiseled gilded bronze depicting a large basin animated with openwork and trefoiled naturalist motifs supported by three link chains with spherical and polylobed grip rings ending at the top with a bail cover in the shape of a count's crown with lotus-shaped foliage, the lower part is decorated with acanthus leaves and a ringed pine cone topped with rosettes and ribbon knots. Good condition and beautiful gilding, the interior is formerly electrified by two large screw light points. Dimensions: 1 m 40 high X 60 cm wide. The new religious momentum driven by the 19th century asserted itself through the construction of numerous churches and allowed
