Description

These late 19th-century console tables illustrate a remarkable blend of European and Asian decorative influences. Their structure is typically European, while their ornamentation evokes a rich and elaborate oriental style. The legs of the console tables take the form of elephant heads, supported by majestic buffaloes, testifying to exceptional craftsmanship. The carved frieze of the console tables is in the form of sinuous clouds decorated with various motifs, such as birds, bats, and mythical creatures. This intricate ornamentation creates an evocative and fascinating atmosphere, demonstrating the harmony between European and Asian arts at the time. Made of ironwood, these console tables are not only functional pieces of furniture but also works of art in their own right, capturing the
