1948-1949, he spent a year and a half in a sanatorium. Sick, he lived in the countryside in different places in the south of France: Montfroc, Simiane-la-Rotonde, Vence, Le Piole, Saint-Paul-de-Vence, Aix-en-Provence, Antibes, Sillans-la-Cascade. He discovered the work of Joë Bousquet, the drawings of Louis Soutter, the aphorisms of Lichtenberg. He made around 2,000 drawings in Indian ink during this period, he painted and acquired an engraver's press. But suffering from visual problems, he was forced to give up drawing. In 1959, he composed his first assemblages, a kind of three-dimensional collage, or relief paintings made of recycled objects and materials. His work has been labeled "surrealism" or "art brut". He certainly drew on it, but Louis Pons is an art singular; through his boxes, his reliquaries, his collages, his assemblages, he tirelessly pursues a poetic ethnology that is his own. Gilles Plazy says of him that he is a "gatherer of debris who composes original works with worn things", works that can be found morbid but which are always full of oddities, incongruities, surprises and sometimes even humor. free shipping for the European Union 250 EURuros for International
