pendants is placed on a brick-colored field, with staircase decoration for the ends.

The black spandrels have undergone oxidation due to the black dye used in the 19th century.

Oxidation that is found on many Anatolians with this shade.

The wine lees color, very present, is obtained by using madder root, acorns and wood ash.

The curry-like color is obtained by mixing yellow pirene, wood ash and madder.

The moss green or lichen was obtained by a clever mix of vase and acorns.

The border is made up of stylized flowers of the most beautiful effect, taking up the colors of the whole.

These floral motifs, medallions, fields and borders were knotted in the tradition of the "Siebenbürgen".

These Anatolian carpets, whose Christian churches of Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, were sponsors.

The most important collection of "Siebenbürgen" is located in Brasov, in the black church (formerly Kronstadt) in Romania.

An old carpet of a beautiful pedigree of a fine thickness, six millimeters.

This piece also has many similarities with the old Mochkabad carpets from Persia.

This rug has been professionally and ecologically cleaned.
