Description

- Oil on canvas. - A prominent militant of the most Stalinist line of communism during the Civil War, and then from his exile in the Soviet Union, Santiago Carrillo was an exceptional and controversial figure in 20th-century Spanish politics and history. During a hundred-year life, he made and unmade in the besieged Madrid of the Republic, and then in Moscow, becoming on his return to post-Franco Spain an apostle of the regime's marginalized. The immense popularity of the Communist Party in the early years of the young democracy allowed it to appear in the pages of the Constitution and to take part, from the shadows where it dominated all his life, in the country's decisions. Although his responsibility for the partisan massacres that purged Madrid's prisons of discordant elements during the Civil
