expressed everywhere on the passage of His Majesty, and you will attach great importance to preserving a work that will transmit the testimony to your children. I beg you to communicate it to all those who are in a position to appreciate the happiness that France enjoys under the reign of the Bourbons. I have the honour to be, Sir, with the most distinguished consideration, (Signature)

"The work is easy to handle, the pages are well glued.(1). Charles-Jacques De Fadate de St Georges (1779-1854) is a French politician before and after the Revolution. He became Prefect of Côte-du-Nord in 1827 by royal decree under Charles X, until the Revolution of July 1830, when he resigned and retired into private life.
