Description

Guittot's skill in capturing the grace and power of the human body is revealed in the fluid lines and detailed relief of the figure's anatomy. The choice of a classical theme, combined with the subtle emotion of the moment, makes this sculpture a perfect fusion of elegance and introspection.

Gaston Guitton (1901-1977) was a French sculptor and artist, best known for his impressive work in the classical tradition of sculpture. Born in Paris, his work was often characterized by a combination of anatomical precision and emotional depth. Guitton was influenced by ancient Greek and Roman sculpture, which is clearly reflected in his stylized yet expressive human figures.
