Description

This bronze sculpture with a brown patina, signed by Émile Bruchon (1806-1895), is a remarkable work from the Belle Époque. Bruchon, a leading French sculptor of this period, captured elegance and grace in this figurative piece. The work depicts a woman leaning on a fountain, quenching her thirst. The fine lines and meticulous details of the sculpture are a testament to Bruchon's exceptional talent. Each curve and line are worked with a precision that brings the scene to life, making the whole both realistic and poetic. This sculpture is a perfect example of the art of the Belle Époque, where attention to detail and the search for beauty were paramount. It embodies not only the artist's expertise, but also the spirit of an era marked by elegance and refinement. A true treasure for art lovers and
