Description

Neapolitan santon* (nativity scene character) in polychrome terracotta (head and visible limbs), representing a man wearing embroidered fabric clothes, from Naples - Italy, from the 18th century. This santon is in its original condition. Please note: one foot is detached, accidents and missing parts on the hands and feet (broken fingers), tears and wear on the clothes (especially the red jacket on the back), take a good look at the photos. We have other Neapolitan santons for sale on this site. * Neapolitan santons: Neapolitan nativity scenes are very different from those seen in churches due to the importance of secular scenes. They do not limit themselves to depicting the nativity, the baby Jesus surrounded by the holy family, but are vast compositions with abundant decorations and multiple characters, often involving the best artists. Its spectacular character and its scenographic richness are only possible thanks to the activity of several artists and craftsmen (architects, sculptors, painters, goldsmiths, ceramists, tailors, etc.). Indeed, thanks to their imagination, they managed to reproduce the daily life of the Neapolitans of the 17th and 18th centuries. The elegance of the figuration and the finesse of execution of these santons also reveals the quality of the know-how of the Neapolitan craftsmen. The market, the hotel, the dances, the street vendors, the beggars, the tavern, the different trades, the guarding of the herds, the royal procession, and everything that was within the reach of everyday life or fantasy, had its place in the Neapolitan nativity scenes testifies to the richness and variety of this artisanal production.
