Description

Surroundings of François Boucher (1703-1770). Putto giving offerings to a child Venus and her attendants. In the lush vegetation of the left foreground, a kneeling putto reveals the contents of a casket containing jewels, fabrics and ointments. Behind him in the background, another putto rides a dromedary. In front of him, leaning on a blue silk cushion, is a representation of Venus as a child. One putto presents her reflection in a mirror, another crowns her with a wreath of roses, and a third prays behind her. At her feet are two doves. In the right foreground, incense smoke billows from a perfume burner. The format of our painting suggests that it could have been a door overlay. This type of subject, with divinities or allegories represented in the form of putti, was very much in vogue at
