Description

Renaissance Bronze Column Candlestick - France, 16th Century Style
Elegant bronze candlestick dating from the end of the Renaissance (16th/17th century), often referred to as the "Henry II torch". This candlestick is distinguished by the great finesse of its details and the harmony of its proportions. It is composed of: A slightly truncated cone-shaped socket or cup, with a cylindrical extraction window, overhanging a graceful shaft, separated by a collar. The subtly rounded and smooth column shaft ends with a refined cylindrical entablature. The whole rests on a thick base, meticulously hand-shaped on the lathe, decorated with a delicately worked relief molding on the top, which guarantees perfect stability (see photos).
