Description

A superb oil painting on canvas by the marine painter Jean-Louis Paguenaud.

It depicts a warship, possibly a cruiser, in the open sea. This is the painter's favored subject, and these are his most sought-after works.

The depiction of the choppy sea is of very high quality, and the artist's brushstroke is instantly recognizable.

The painting is annotated on the stretcher:

"Bizerte, choppy sea, rough weather."

The artwork is in good condition, with a small impact to note (see photos).

Sold without a frame.

Dimensions: 61 x 50 cm

Jean-Louis Paguenaud (1876 - 1952)

Paguenaud was born on June 30, 1876, in Coussac-Bonneval (Haute-Vienne) and passed away on May 31, 1952, in Limoges. He was a renowned French painter, particularly recognized for his maritime works.

From his childhood, he was raised in Algeria, where he developed a passion for the sea and exotic landscapes. After returning to France, he continued his artistic education at the School of Decorative Arts in Limoges and then at the Académie Julian in Paris, where he is said to have studied under William-Adolphe Bouguereau.

Throughout his career, Paguenaud harbored a passion for travel and distant lands, including the Basque Country, Spain, Asia, the West Indies, Africa, North Africa, and Polynesia. This thirst for adventure is reflected in his works, which capture the beauty and exoticism of these regions.

In 1922, he was appointed official painter of the Navy, a prestigious title that reflects the recognition of his talent by French institutions.

Paul Valéry dubbed him "The Admiral of Painters, the Painter of Admirals."

The Museum of the Navy holds several of his works, showcasing his lasting influence in the field of maritime art.

We are actively seeking works by Marine painters such as Paguenaud.
