Nieuwenhuys and Asger Jorn. He actively participated in exhibitions and wrote articles in the magazine Cobra. After the dissolution of the movement, he moved to Paris and rubbed shoulders with the surrealists. He gradually abandoned oil painting for other, faster techniques that better suited his research, including Indian ink used in Japanese calligraphy, which fascinated him. His first major exhibition was organized in 1955 at the Palais des Beaux-Arts in Brussels; in 1998 he exhibited at the Galerie Nationale du Jeu de Paume, and in 2004 at the Centre Pompidou. Finally, from December 2007 to March 2008, the Royal Museums of Fine Arts of Belgium in Brussels paid tribute to him with a retrospective exhibition for his 80th birthday.
