Description

Small satyr holding an owl in his arms in patinated terracotta. Reproducing the signature of CLODION. This charming terracotta statuette from the late 19th century is inspired by the works of Claude Michel, known as Clodion (1738-1814) and represents a young faun, a mythological creature half-man, half-goat. A copy of the original terracotta model is kept in the following museums: Cleveland Museum of Art and Houston Fine Arts in the United States, National Museum of Amsterdam in the Netherlands. It is then accompanied by another figure representing a child Satyr running with a nest. This statuette testifies to the taste of the 18th century for a sculpture in the Rococo style. The subject of child or baby satyrs during Bacchic celebrations often appears in the works
