Description

From a 19th century Parisian workshop, this rare Louis XVI desk in solid mahogany and mahogany veneer is composed of a cylinder dressed with brass rods with an ogee. This cylinder is notable for its two mahogany colors. It is decorated with two side handles and a lock in working order accompanied by its pearl key. Inside, a sliding shelf is lined with green leather with a gold vignette. We find three small drawers with brass knob and three niches. In addition, this desk has a large drawer in the belt and large grooves inlaid with brass on its uprights. It rests on four sheathed legs with brass grooves, a collar at the top and a ball shoe at the bottom. The upper part of this desk is composed of a display case opening with three doors decorated with interior brass moldings surrounding beveled glass. These
