Description

This small tabletop psyche is a refined example of the Venetian Charles X style dating back to 1830. Made of fine wood, it features an elegant and well-proportioned structure. The rectangular, tilting mirror frame is supported by two finely turned twisted columns, adding movement and grace to the whole.

The base is enriched with geometric and floral inlays, executed with great skill, typical of the Venetian tradition. The central drawer, framed by linear inlays, provides a practical space for storing small objects, while the shaped feet complete the design with a touch of lightness.
