Description

"Old very large Persian kettle or samovar", chiseled red copper and cast bronze, 35 X 26 X 14 cm. The reuse of the central part which dates from the 18th century or earlier, completed by a double lid, a handle and a support, attests to the value that was given to it. It must be said that the quality of the chiseling with the jasmine and "Buddha's Tears" decoration is exceptional, much superior to that of the additions. The patina of old leather that the copper takes on over the centuries underlines its interest. I think that embers were introduced into the central tube through the small lid, the foot used to insulate the table from the heat, and the water through the large one.
