together with Otakar Nejedlý.

Together with Nejedlý he painted the French battlefields of World War I. In the 1920s and 1930s he undertook a number of trips abroad (Italy, Dalmatia, Paris) and painted landscapes in various places in Bohemia.

In the years 1909-1911 and 1917-1949 he was a member of the Mánes Association of Fine Artists,[3] from 1923 a member of the curatorial board of the Modern Gallery in Prague, and in 1933 he was admitted to the Czech Academy of Sciences and Arts. He was an active member of the Eighth and the Group of Fine Artists.
