Description

Regule sculpture on a marble base depicting Neptune, the god of the sea, creating the horse. According to myth, Neptune is said to have brought forth the first horse by striking the ground with his trident, symbolizing his power over both land and sea.Signed by Émile Picault (1833-1915), this work reflects the 19th century's fascination with mythology and antiquity. Picault, renowned for his allegorical sculptures, captures a sense of movement and strength, paying tribute to the power of the horse and the authority of the god.With its meticulous craftsmanship and precise details, this piece showcases the artistic skill of its time. It belongs to the tradition of decorative sculptures inspired by great mythological narratives.4o
