Description

This Art Deco tobacco jar, dating from around 1920, combines elegance and originality. It is crafted from rosewood, a prized wood known for its deep hue and refined grain, and enhanced with bronze inlays that add a unique decorative touch. The bronze marquetry design features stylized silhouettes in a dynamic posture, reflecting the distinctive aesthetic of the 1920s. A geometric frieze highlights the base, bringing a harmonious balance to the piece. The metal lid, matching the motifs, has a subtly curved handle, making it easy to open and close. Compact and refined, this piece fits just as well in a collection of smoking accessories as it does in a carefully curated interior. The combination of noble wood and aged metal gives it a timeless charm that effortlessly blends into various décor styles.
