Description

This 19th-century umbrella handle is carved from ivory and depicts a female bust adorned with a wide hat featuring finely detailed elements. The expression and posture convey a sense of softness and elegance.

The handle, likely made of rosewood, showcases a natural grain that adds character to the piece. A delicately decorated metal collar seamlessly connects the two parts, creating a smooth transition between the materials.

The piece has retained a lovely patina, reflecting its age and history. It can complement a collection, be used in a restoration project, or simply serve as a decorative object with authentic charm.
