beginning of the 20th century, with the statue of Meissonnier, a work by Antoine Mercier, at the center, which was transferred to the city of Poissy in 1966. The artist brilliantly captures the springtime hues of the trees lining the Seine, infusing the scene with a lively and luminous atmosphere. A captivating detail, a hot air balloon can be seen in the right background, recalling the excitement of the year 1912, marked by a remarkable boom in aeronautics. This detail adds a historical dimension to the work, anchoring the scene in an era of innovation and adventure. In the background, the dome of the Panthéon can be subtly guessed, offering a poetic glimpse of the Parisian panorama.
