Description

Designed in 1972 by Richard Sapper for Artemide, the Tizio lamp embodies the ingenuity and elegance of industrial design. Its counterweight system allows for precise adjustment without screws or springs, while its articulated arms and adjustable head offer great lighting flexibility. Operating on low voltage (12V) thanks to a transformer integrated into the base, it combines minimalist aesthetics and practicality. A true reference of modernism, the Tizio remains an essential piece of 20th-century design.
