he paints battle situations for the army or military ports such as Brest for the navy, before the French Revolution. During the French Revolution he painted the storming of the Bastille, as well as the Bastille Ball which took place there the following year. He also painted castles, such as that of Chanteloup, and the pagoda in his garden. Henri-Joseph Van Blarenberghe, drawing master of the young princes at Versailles, was also the first curator of the Palais des Beaux-Arts in Lille.
