Description

Ship's horn. 20th century.
Horn of the type used to give warning in case of fog in maritime and military environments, made of metal, with some traces of paint. Note that, while the fog horns of ships were generally fixed to the ground, this one has a kind of handle allowing to hold the instrument with the foot, closer to examples such as the American army horn created by Faraday, for example, and this horn could be used in places where it was necessary to move it.
