Description

Pair of Cast Bronze Roosters Early 1900s made in several parts and then assembled by welding, then chiseled and silvered. They are works from the first decades of the 1900s in which the truthfulness of the different postures of the roosters and the executive ability of the craftsman who made them are striking.

The measures are different and respectively indicated.

They are in perfect condition with some small minimal oxidation of the silver plating as you can see in the image gallery. They are of Italian origin and belong to the Liberty period, very sensitive to the Animalier spirit in depicting farmyard animals in various ways and beyond.
