Description

Large and decorative still life by the painter Louis Vollen. The colors are vibrant, especially the reds and oranges of the fruit contrasting with the deep green of the leaves and fabric. The textural effect is very well worked: the shine of the grapes, the grainy flesh of the watermelon and the softness of the fabric are well rendered. The light seems to come from the left, creating shadows and reflections on the fruit and fabric. This type of painting is in the classic tradition of 19th century still lifes, where the abundance and richness of the fruit evoke prosperity and pleasure of the senses. The book in the right corner could symbolize knowledge or culture, adding an intellectual dimension to the scene. It is a detailed and harmonious work, which beautifully captures the textures and colors of the natural elements.
