Description

Pair of fireplace andirons. In iron. 19th century. Pair of iron fireplace andirons, composed of a horizontal piece to be placed under the firewood and another decorative piece at the front (this one composed of a rectangular plate ending in two facing volutes and another vertical piece reminiscent of a column and ending in a flat disc). Although elements such as volutes already appear in Romanesque wrought iron, the lines of the andirons are more reminiscent of neoclassical examples in certain details. -
