Description

Oil on canvas 18th century depicting a painter of the Italian Florentine school of the 16th century "covering" or painting a perizonium to -probably- hide the sex of the subject. The work needs to be restored, the varnish has chancis so needs cleaning and slightly re-stretching the canvas, but the painting is preserved without false surprises and promises a very interesting result. There is an accident (at the hands) and two or three small holes. Formerly gilded wooden frame 97cm x 72cm.
