Anepigraphic Scarab Amulet - Late Period

850 EUR

Period : Before 16th century

Condition : Bon état

Material : Earthenware

Length : 3cm

Description

Anepigraphic scarab amulet - Late Period

An anepigraphic scarab-shaped amulet from the Egyptian Late Period (664 to 332 BC). Made of siliceous faience, a material frequently used for amulets and votive objects, it has a stylized morphology. Incisions mark the main anatomical divisions of the scarab, including the head, thorax, and elytra.

The underside is smooth, without inscriptions or decorations. The object is in a good state of preservation, with a glaze showing a patina of use, probably due to burial.

Commonly used as funerary talismans, these amulets were associated with the symbolism of

Dealer

Collection éclectique

Objets inspirés de l'antique - souvenirs du grand tour - curiosités

Mobile : 0698227977

Paris 75016

the scarab in Egyptian culture.
The insect, linked to the solar cycle and regeneration, was seen as a manifestation of the attributes of the god Khepri, the sun in the making.

Width: 3cm