Nuestra Señora de la Soledad, or Our Lady of Solitude, is a significant figure in colonial art, particularly within the context of Spanish and Mexican traditions. This Marian image has deep roots in both religious devotion and artistic representation.
Historical Background
The veneration of Our Lady of Solitude can be traced back to the 17th century. The most notable image associated with this title is Nuestra Señora de la Soledad de Porta Vaga, which originated in Cavite, Philippines, in 1667.

According to local lore, a sentinel witnessed a vision of a woman dressed in black, which led to the discovery of a painting depicting the Virgin Mary in mourning attire. This image has since become an object of deep devotion and is celebrated for its miracles and intercessions.
