Beaux-Arts. Humbert-Vignot was a post-impressionist painter. She was inspired not by previous eras but by her own time, which gave her a completely accurate point of view. She mainly painted nudes, portraits, war scenes, or flowers, after the Great War. Her inspirations came from Spain and particularly from gypsies. According to the archives, portraits of gypsies represent the majority of her work. Her war paintings allowed her to externalize her feelings. She painted bodies damaged by war, as well as emaciated bodies. Following her exhibitions, she received many prizes and awards.
